I had the Bauhn tv and set top box/old tv on the same external aerial point with a cheap "T" shaped splitter. The Bauhn couldn't pick up Ch9 or Go(Ch99) and the set top box occasionally broke up the signal on ABC1 an ABC2 - So I'd say it has to do with tuner variations.

I have a Bauhn TV that's been working fine up until I thought I'd get clever and was playing around with the remote. After reading the instruction manual I think I've hit the green button. The manual tells you that the screen will go blank (I've got sound) but doesn't tell you how to reverse the process.

I bought this TV from Aldi and thankfully returned it with a full refund as to express words cannot even explain the reality of how bad the TV was. Now already owning a Bauhn 55" 4K TV and writing a review - on product review - The new 65" 4K HDR Android TV is a major disappointment.

Bauhn TV review
Have had this Bauhn ATV-46FLEM 46" tv for 7 years and it ages ok. The reason for giving it a 3-star rating is that you really just get what you pay for. It has been great to me for the past 6 years but most electrical technology (in this case, a tv) start to die after 7 years, and this is the case for me.

Today we'll look at Bauhn. Bauhn is an Australian-based electronics manufacturer. According to its website, they make and distribute "Televisions, Tablet PCs, Blu-Ray Players, Digital Set Top Boxes and Home Theatre Entertainment Systems." That's a pretty large lineup, although we haven't seen all of them at Aldi in the United States.
