I recently received a copy of No Bullshit Social Media written by Jason Falls and Erik Deckers and I can say that it delivers what exactly what the title promises. It provocatively takes the assault on social media fluff and walks the reader through practical advice and backs it with numerous examples on how businesses can use social media to grow the bottom line.

Why have we let social media take over our lives? Most of us, at least in my generation, let Facebook and Twitter influence us every single day. We are given this picture perfect ideal created by social media moguls and most of us are coaxed into thinking that this is how our lives should be or look like. Well, that's bullshit.

No Bullshit. It will reinforce what you know, give you more ideas and help those you work with see social media marketing as a viable mechanism to reach, involve and persuade consumers to do more than "Like" or follow. And if you know a small business owner that hasn't jumped on the social media train yet, buy this book for them.
